You don't want to mess with these teams

Inside SEAL Team Six by Don Mann-Mann, a thirty year veteran of the Navy SEALs, brings readers into the world of our nation's elite combat unit. He recalls what he had to overcome personally in order to serve as an active SEAL and a Training Officer for SEAL Team Six and what life was like in the field when you knew any mission could be your last. BELMONT/Adult 359.984 MAN

Rogue heroes by Ben Macintyre-David Stirling was a junior officer in the British armed forces during WWII when he started the legendary SAS. Macintyre expertly spins the tale of how Stirling and Jock Lewes changed the face of modern combat by using a highly trained force to disrupt German operations behind enemy lines. Those interested in military history will enjoy the stories garnered from Macintyre's unprecedented access to the SAS archives and interviews with the few surviving members of the original unit. BELMONT/Adult 940.51 MAC

Making their mark between the lines

Dream Team by Jack McCallum-In 1992 the IOC opened the door to professional basketball players in the Olympics and the U.S. responded by putting together the greatest collection of talent ever seen on one team. Using his own notes from covering the team that year and interviews with the players nearly twenty years later McCallum tells the story of the Dream Team including bonding over card games in hotels, the politics behind the controversial decision to leave Isaiah Thomas off the team, and a play-by-play account of the most famous pickup game in history. BELMONT/Adult 796.323 MCC

Now I can die in peace by Bill Simmons-Before October 2004 Red Sox fans knew three things were inevitable: death, taxes, and the Sox finding a way to lose. Simmons, a life-long fan, shares the articles he wrote about the Red Sox as ESPN's "Sports Guy" from 1998 through April 2005 while the team assembled the roster that would change the perception of the once beleaguered franchise. A must read for any Sox fan, especially those over 30. BELMONT/Adult 790.357 SIM

If these teams were real we'd totally be joining

The Camel Club by David Baldacci-A quartet of Washington D.C. conspiracy theorists, whose leader goes by the pseudonym Oliver Stone, witness the murder of a Secret Service agent set up to look like a suicide. While the Secret Service investigates, the four men start their own investigation discovering that some of their theories might not have been as far fetched as the general public might think. This is the first entry in the Camel Club series by Baldacci. BELMONT/Adult FIC BAL

A conspiracy of faith by Jussi Adler-Olsen-Detective Mørck used to be one of Copenhagen's top homicide detectives but now he runs Department Q where he and his team work the city's cold cases. This time a letter in a bottle written in blood leads the team towards a kidnapping case that was never reported and whose perpetrator may still be at large. This is the third entry in Adler-Olsen's Department Q series. BELMONT/Adult MYS ADL

Teams with a historic impact

Gateway to freedom by Eric Foner-Sydney Howard Gay, the New York abolitionist and newspaperman, was one of the few involved with the Underground Railroad to keep detailed records of his activities. With Gay's notes and other primary sources Foner has put together a history of the Underground Railroad in New York, a state where abolitionists weren't always in the majority leading up to the Civil War. The historian goes beyond the legends of the Underground Railroad to give readers an idea of what it was life was like for escapees and those helping them. BELMONT/Adult 973.71 FON

Sisters: the lives of America's suffragists by Jean Baker-Over 130 years passed between when the U.S. Constitution was signed and when a federal amendment was passed giving American women the right to vote. Lucy Stone, Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Frances Willard, and Alice Paul were all instrumental in the fight for women's suffrage in the United States. Baker delves into everything from upbringings to romantic relationships to explore how each woman's personal life motivated her in the fight for women's rights. BELMONT/Adult 324.623 BAK
